International financial integration allows countries to become net creditors or net debtors with respect to the rest of the world. In this paper, we show that a small set of fundamentals shifts in relative output levels, the stock of public debt, and demographic factors can do much to explain the evolution of net foreign asset positions. In addition, we highlight that external wealth plays a critical role in determining the behavior of the trade balance both through shifts in the desired net foreign asset position and the investment returns generated on the outstanding stock of net foreign assets. Finally, we provide some evidence that a portfolio balance effect exists; real interest rate differentials are inversely related to net foreign asset positions.

In recent years, term premia have been very low and sometimes even negative. Now, with the United States economy growing above potential inflationary pressures are on the rise, term premia are very sensitive to the expected future path of growth, inflation, and monetary policy. An inflation surprise could require monetary policy to tighten faster than anticipated, inducing a sudden decompression of term and other risk premia. Thus, tightening financial conditions, this paper proposes a semi-structural dynamic term structure model augmented with macroeconomic factors to include cyclical dynamics with a focus on medium to long run forecasts. Our results clearly show that a macroeconomic approach is warranted while term premium estimates are in line with those from other studies. We provide i) plausible stable estimates of expected long-term interest rates and ii) forecasts of short and long-term interest rates as well as cyclical macroeconomic variables that are stunningly close to those generated from large scale macroeconomic models.

Long-term Capital Movements 2001
this selected issues paper discusses promotion of economic transformation in nigeria. Nigeria's long term potential is keyed on promoting economic transformation; this implies taking stock of initial conditions, assessing long term financing capacity, and evaluating the policies and reforms to be implemented to meet the long term vision. The recent fall in prices has highlighted the challenging but compelling need to address remaining development challenges. This paper discusses some of these development imperatives, including current regional disparities and ongoing policy initiatives, capacity to finance infrastructure needs, promoting domestic saving through developing financial inclusion, and the opportunity cost of quasi fiscal activities.

The COVID-19 pandemic has led to a severe global recession with differential impacts within and across countries. This paper examines the possible persistent effects scarring of the pandemic on the economy and the channels through which they may occur. History suggests that deep recessions often leave long-lived scars, particularly to productivity. Importantly, financial instabilities typically associated with worse scarring have been largely avoided in the current crisis so far, while medium-term output losses are anticipated to be lower than after the global financial crisis. They are still expected to be substantial, the degree of expected scarring varies across countries depending on the structure of economies and the size of the policy response. Emerging market and developing economies are expected to suffer more scarring than advanced economies.

This paper presents some facts on China's role in the world economy and measures the impact of China's growth on growth in the rest of the world in the short and long term. Short run estimates based on VARS and error correction models suggest that spillover effects of China's growth have increased in recent decades. Long term spillover effects estimated through growth regressions based on panel data are also significant and have extended in recent decades beyond Asia. The estimates are robust to the effects of global and regional shocks, changes in model specification, and sample period.

Understanding Innovation in Emerging Economic Spaces 2016-03-09

in this paper we analyze the economic impacts of response measures adopted in Ethiopia to curtail the spread of the Covid 19 pandemic we carry out simulations using an economywide multiplier model based on a 2017 social accounting matrix SAM for the country that properly depicts interactions between economic agents the pandemic's impact on the global economy combined with disruptions it causes in Ethiopia represents a large unprecedented shock to the country's economy in such situations a SAM based multiplier model provides an ideal tool for measuring the short term direct and indirect impacts of a shock on an economic system since there is limited room for proper adjustment of economic decisions we model the seven week partial lockdown policy implemented in Ethiopia from mid March to early May 2020 we also consider two possible economic recovery scenarios that may emerge as the COVID-19 control policies are relaxed during the latter part of 2020 in order to generate insights on the potential continuing impact of the virus at the end of 2020 although the country took early swift measures our assessment of the partial lockdown measures suggests that they were not as strict as those observed in other Africa countries accordingly our estimates of the economic costs of COVID-19 on Ethiopia are significantly lower than those reported for other countries on the continent we estimate that during the lockdown period Ethiopia's GDP suffered a 14 percent loss 43.5 billion birr or 1.9 billion USD compared to a no-COVID case over the same period nearly two thirds of the losses were in the services sector although no direct restrictions were imposed on the agriculture sector which serves as the primary means of livelihood for most Ethiopians the sector faced a 4.7 percent loss in output due to its linkages with the rest of the economy poor export performance due to a slowdown in global trade and restrictions on the transport sector also partly explain the decline in agricultural output the broader agri-food system also was affected considerably because of its linkages with the rest of the economy in terms of the welfare of Ethiopians we estimate that the economic impacts during the lockdown caused 10.1 million additional people to fall below the poverty line these findings have implications for better understanding the direct and indirect impacts of COVID-19 and for policy design during the recovery period to return Ethiopia's economy to a normal growth trajectory and to protect the livelihoods of the most vulnerable in the process.
