ruth christa mathieson s unique reading of matthew s parable of the royal wedding feast matt 22 1 14 which concludes with the king s demand that one of the guests be bound and cast out into the outer darkness focuses on the means of the underdressed guest’s expulsion using sociorhetorical interpretation Mathieson draws the parable into conversation with early Jewish narratives of the angel Raphael binding hands and feet in Enoch Tobit and the protocol for expelling individuals from the community in Matt 18. She asserts that readers are invited to consider if the person who is bound and cast out is a danger to the little ones of the community of faith unless removed and restrained.

"Everything is Ready: Come to the Marriage Banquet"

Interpreters of Matthew’s parable of the wedding feast 22 1-14 typically associate the king with God and then justify his violent attacks against city and guests. Interpreters of the parable of the ten virgins 25 1-13 typically associate the bridegroom with Jesus and then justify his extreme rejection of the foolish virgins. Questioning such allegorical interpretations, this study first details how Hebrew, Greek, and Roman texts depict without requiring allegorical understandings numerous bridegrooms associated not only with joy but also with violence and death. Second, this project appeals to the disruptive nature of parables. Feminist techniques of resisting reading and the Matthew’s own ethical instructions to argue that in the parables those who resist violent rulers and uncaring bridegrooms are the ones worthy of the kingdom. The study then shows how the Matthew’s Jesus the brideless celibate bridegroom creates a fictive family by disrupting biological and marital ties of making masculinity and undermining the desirability of marriage and procreation.

A companion book to Growing a Successful Marriage Through Faith, also by Charlie L. Jones, this unique premarital counseling tool is presented in the form of an easy to read story. Young and impressionable Daisy Cabbage, head resides in Mr. Goodson’s garden with other vegetables, she has reached the age of courtship and is looking for a relationship that may lead to marriage. But how to choose the best helpmate? Given all the suitors in the garden, each vegetable represents a personality type she might consider as a partner, who would make a good husband? She soon realizes that first her heart must be cultivated by her gardener to receive the seed of faith. For she must be well grounded in faith in order to make the best decisions. The lessons learned by Daisy also apply to humans seeking long term relationships. Readers are invited to read each section of the book and answer corresponding questions in the Vegetable Soup Section. The Food for Thought section provides space for the reader to write their thoughts about the issues. The Gumbo Section encourages you to analyze the type of relationship you have and demonstrates that even in a tumultuous marriage, trials are sometimes the soil in which faith grows. All things work for the good for those who love the Lord, and all things are possible if the Holy Spirit is your guide. The book stresses the need for a healthy lifestyle in mind, emotional, body, nutritional, and soul. Spiritual biblical scriptures and proverbs are used to illustrate the stages of spiritual maturity. Role reversal is used to make the story gender friendly and to address role ambiguities and double standards in courtship. The book is for anyone wanting to build relationships based on biblical principles. It provides instruction on how to look beyond another’s physical appearance, and spiritual status and accomplishments and allow God to let them see their spiritual essence. That is the best way to ensure a relationship will stand the trials of life and the test of time. Teens over 16 will also enjoy the story and it’s a non-threatening way for parents to address issues relevant to them such as bullying, respecting authority figures, and self-esteem, and can be used to encourage better nutritional choices and promote a love for gardening.
